In the conditions of national growth, the freedom of the individual is ensured, and his rights, needs and well-being are ensured. Through the laws and regulations related to socio-economic development, the social life and actions of individuals will improve. It also creates the conditions that create the moral and psychological climate of the society in which individuals live. In addition, the politics of compromise and consensus lies in national growth. Because historical development shows that it is impossible to have a society without contradictions and conflicts. Accordingly, national growth consists in uniting the forces in society on the basis of agreement and compromise, bringing them to a mutually beneficial decision, i.e. consensus, and mobilizing them for the development of the country.

Indeed, in the conditions of national growth, the processes of state building and the formation of a democratic society should be liberalized, all branches of government should be fully independent from each other, the state should carry out its main tasks, and the construction of a civil society would require the transfer of a number of authorized tasks from the state to the local government. requires the deepening of the reform process through the gradual handing over of power, public structures, and citizens to self-management bodies.

In the conditions of national growth in the Republic of Uzbekistan, great positive changes have been achieved in the country towards the establishment of a democratic legal state and a democratic society. In particular, democratic reforms have been accelerated and expanded, positive reforms have been carried out and are being continued in terms of ensuring human rights and freedoms, increasing citizen activity, and deepening the reform of the judicial system. A. Saitkasimov stated, "In any place and time, the strategy of national development has been measured by its state power, national pride, socio-economic policy, cultural-educational level, science, tradition and spiritual potential. . At a time when the scale of global development is rapidly developing, the development strategy of our country requires not only finding a place in the world civilization and taking a place among the leaders, but also participating with one's own potential in ensuring the process of civilization. provides" .

It is an extremely important task to reveal the process of national growth, the formation of national statehood, the mechanisms of national-spiritual foundations and their effective use, and the process of the manifestation of national characteristics in the construction of a democratic society in Uzbekistan. Re-analysis of the necessary and vital needs in relation to national and spiritual progress is becoming extremely important today. S. Otamurodov stated that "the idea of national development is a system of scientifically based concepts and theoretical ideas that directs the nation to economic, socio-political and spiritual-educational heights. The idea of national development is characterized by the fact that it is aimed at solving the tasks facing the nation at a certain stage of historical development. Their implementation will ensure that the nation reaches a higher level than the current one.

In the conditions of national growth, these changes in the structures of human and social life activities, with the emergence of the primacy of the dominance of community life, become the main cause of actions in the mental potential and opportunities of people, the inner life of society, mental experiences, and these changes lead every citizen to social life, especially democratic. It causes an increase in the level and possibilities of influencing the life of the nation and the state in connection with the process of building society.

Consequently, this situation leads to a sharp increase in the attention to the life activities of the whole society, the nation, some individuals, citizens. Spirituality is the embodied expression of people's inner life, spiritual experiences, mental potential. In other words, it is known from the experience of history that the development of spiritual and moral values in the minds of people, raising the national spirit of the people is an important condition and guarantee for the stable development of civil society. Because "any society cannot imagine its future without developing and strengthening its spiritual potential, spirituality and moral values in the minds of people."

National progress, which is recognized as the most important, fairest, most correct path of the society, is considered the most suitable society for restoring the spiritual heritage of the ancestors, developing it and passing it on to the next generation. .

In particular, national growth includes culture, enlightenment in the society, from relations between people to solving worldly problems, conflict, compromise and unity, economy, politics and tasks in the conditions of diversity of opinions. As people's consciousness and thinking expands, their attitude towards national development also changes. Usually, the mood of the community and its spiritual image are formed from the mental experiences, actions and character of individuals.

Since the first days of its existence, mankind has lived, is living and lives only in certain historical units. This is the law. That is why man is, first of all, a social being. One of the most important tasks related to the understanding of the identity of a person and humanity is to know this historical unit itself, its historical essence and tasks, what it has been able to do or not, to consciously define its relations with it, and it consists in manifesting and materializing these relations through one's activity. This task is carried out in the context of national growth, with the help of its principles. This is the role of national growth in social life.

As the processes of national growth manifest their scale in social practice, a completely new self-sustainable historical unity emerges. One of the main tasks of the citizens of Uzbekistan is to understand and know the essence, history, purpose and importance of this historical unity that has been created. Scientists say that "Uzbekistan is steadily realizing important tasks in the near future to liberalize social life, develop a market economy, form a civil society, and create a legal state that serves the interests of individuals and society."

The influence of the idea of national progress is extremely important in determining humanity and positive qualities in a person. Therefore, it is appropriate to divide the issue related to the idea of national development with the issue of spirituality. The specific aspects of the historical unity determine the basis and essence of the idea of national progress. Also, the idea of national progress includes relations between certain ethnic groups related to life, such as family, neighborhood, and embodies the goals, tasks, and directions of these relations.

Scientists say, "Today, the modern requirements of the formation of civil society in our country require further improvement of the system to ensure the effective performance of the tasks performed by the neighborhoods. Accordingly, the great importance of the neighborhood in the life and fate of citizens is increasing. Today, the neighborhood is required to be a center of promotion, responding to prosperity and well-being, peace and stability, security and development, spiritual perfection in the society.

Our nation has faced many difficulties and problems during its long and many years of glorious history. At this time, our people rely on their strength, faith, and thinking to eliminate them. The current difficulties in creating the idea of national progress and inculcating it into society, nation and people's life will certainly be overcome. This idea basically consists of a system of philosophical, political, legal, artistic, religious ideas that theoretically supports and protects the fundamental interests of a nation or society.

The principles of social development are fully realized in conditions where public administration and the system of authorities are liberalized, and social programs are widely implemented. Social reforms are mainly aimed at human interests and well-being, and are based on universal human principles, in which human life, freedom, dignity, pride, honor and other inalienable rights are considered the highest values. In the conditions of social reforms, the state operates based on the principles of justice and legality, which aims at the well-being of people and society, ensures the protection of the rights and legal interests of public associations, and creates equal legal opportunities for them to participate in social life. "In the past period, the path of national development based on the unique characteristics of our nation, ancient traditions of statehood, and best practices in the world was defined. This, firstly, gave impetus to the formation and improvement of government and administrative bodies, citizens' self-governance bodies in our country, to acquire a new meaning of their activities, and secondly, reforms carried out in all spheres of social life in the direction of a single goal created the necessary conditions for its implementation."

In social reforms, it is important not only about the basic and systematizing principles that determine and give the standards of social, economic and political relations, but also about the social and legal principles that acquire constitutional power in legislation and serve as the basis for the application of law. For example, the principle of social justice in this process is reflected in practice as a legal and moral requirement. The moral standards of the participants in the process of social reforms are determined on the basis of this principle. It is permissible to emphasize the importance of social values related to people, social groups, and society in general in the reforms.

In the conditions of the new Uzbekistan, the first experiences, ways and methods of social reforms are being mastered, and advanced principles of development are being formed in the modernized society. "Dialogue between the state and society, unification of interested parties, large-scale cooperation at the national and international level - this is the basis for increasing the effectiveness of fundamental reforms implemented in Uzbekistan."

An important task in the implementation of social reforms is to solve social problems. The principles of solving the problems of daily life of a person and ensuring his interests are important and determine the description and direction of all other further updates in the reforms. In addition, the involvement of public power in reforming the social system and a strong social policy will undermine the factors that undermine stability in society. In particular, the revision of the principles, forms and methods of management structures in the social, political and economic spheres, and the assignment of coordination and ordering tasks in the state policy are also important principles in the implementation of reforms.

The implementation of reforms is complex in nature, however, all socio-political, legal, organizational and economic resources in the society of New Uzbekistan, as well as additional personnel, finance, property, power, natural resources, systems of political and legal institutions specific measures are being determined for uniform, harmonious development. M. Musayev stated that "Today New Uzbekistan is recognized in the world arena as a country with strong potential, a decent reputation, a prosperous country in all respects, and its influence is increasing more and more. "Democratic reforms implemented in our country so that everyone can live a happy life are pleasing to the hearts of our compatriots."

The harmony of the theory of the legal state and social reforms is also an important principle. According to this theory, the purpose of the state system is to serve the needs of civil society, to ensure the priority of rights and laws, to ensure the guarantee of administrative non-interference in self-regulating processes in the vital activity of society, to protect the interests of producers and the socially unprotected population. will consist of protecting layers and so on. It is important to ensure unconditional adherence to the Constitution and the legislation based on it, and all internationally recognized signs of protection and provision of human rights and freedoms are expressed in this. This has produced important results in the practice of the principle of the rule of law.
